space transportation system
DEF A joint NASA-DOD advanced space transportation concept for the 1980s. The main element of the STS is the Space Shuttle. Another element is the orbit transfer vehicles-OTV. A third element called Spacelab is designed and manufactured by the European Space Agency, has no propulsive capability and is carried by the Space Shuttle. Used for STS.

tides
DEF The periodic rising and falling of the Earth's oceans and atmosphere. It results from the gravitational forces of the moon and sun acting upon the rotating Earth. The disturbance actually propagates as a wave through the atmosphere and along the surface of the waters of the Earth. Atmospheric tides are always so designated, whereas the term tide alone commonly implies the oceanic variety. Used for tidal oscillation.

SN (ALTITUDE APPROXIMATELY 15 TO 20 KM)
DEF The boundary between the troposphere and the stratosphere, usually characterized by an abrupt change of lapse rate. The change is in the direction of increased atmospheric stability from regions below to regions above the tropopause. Its height varies from 15 to 20 kilometers in the tropics to about 10 kilometers in polar regions. In polar regions in winter it is often difficult or impossible to determine just where the tropopause lies, since under some conditions there is no abrupt change in lapse rate at any height.

weak interactions (field theory)
DEF One class of the fundamental interactions among elementary particles responsible for beta decay of nuclei, and for the decay of elementary particles with lifetimes greater than about 10^{-10} seconds such as muons, K mesons, and lambda hyperons; it is several orders of magnitude weaker than the strong and electromagnetic interactions and fails to conserve strangeness or parity. zinc–bromide batteries
DEF Electric cells in which during charge, zinc is plated on the anode and bromine is evolved at the cathode. The bromine is transferred to an external chamber for mixing and storing with an organic liquid complexing oil. During discharge, the zinc is oxidized at the anode and the complexed bromine is reduced at the cathode.

16. Abstract

The NASA Thesaurus contains the authorized subject terms by which the documents in the NASA STI Databases are indexed and retrieved. The scope of this controlled vocabulary includes not only aerospace engineering, but all supporting areas of engineering and physics, the natural space sciences (astronomy, astrophysics, planetary science), Earth sciences, and to some extent, the biological sciences. Volume 1 – Hierarchical Listing With Definitions contains over 17,700 subject terms, 3,832 definitions, and more than 4,000 USE cross references. The Hierarchical Listing presents full hierarchical structure for each term along with 'related term' lists, and can serve as an orthographic authority. Volume 2 – Rotated Term Display is a ready-reference tool which provides over 21,000 additional 'access points' to the thesaurus terminology. It contains the postable and nonpostable terms found in the Hierarchical Listing arranged in a KWIC (key-word-in-context) index.
